Once the E911, phase two system is deployed, there will be a demand for location-based services and applications beyond the ~~E991~~ E911 service. However, it may not be safe or private to have the location of a cellular telephone known to strangers or third parties. For example, a mother would like to be able to locate her child using the location identification capability of the child's cellular telephone, but would not want other people to locate her child without her permission especially if her child is lost.
